Successor To Ramparts To Be Issued Next Week

A successor publication was announced Friday night to the radical magazine Ramparts, which exposed covert activities of the Central Intelligence Agency.

The publication will be called Seven Days, and one of its joint editors will be David Dellinger, a left political activist and pacifist who was a defendant in the "Chicago Seven" conspiracy trial.

Mr. Dellinger told Reuters Friday night that the magazine would appear with its first issue this week. He said that it would begin publication as a monthly, but would become a weekly as soon as possible.

He said that he and his joint editors would turn the publication into what he termed a political alternative to Time magazine and other established news weeklies.

Ramparts, which ceased formal publication with its October issue, reached a circulation of 250,000 during the 1960s as it ran a series of exposés on the scope of American involvement in Vietnam and on the activities of the C. I. A.
